The Dilemma of Niger Delta experience in Nigeria: The struggle of an indigenous people in the sub-Saharan West Africa clamoring for social, environmental, and political justice Prof Augustine Ephraim Uranta, Rev. Augustine Ephraim Uranta PhD

The book is titled: The dilemma of Niger Delta experience in Nigeria, it is a scientific and empirical research work that tells the story of the ordeal an indigenous people living in the sub-Saharan West African region clamoring for self identity, social justice in the distribution of their God-given oil and gas resources, which is grossly expropriated by the central government with no equitable balance, thus leaving the marginalized minority of the region in a state of squalor, and palpable hopelessness,. It thus poses a parasitic scenario in the conception of nationalism by the raped minority, it is indeed an intrigue of federalism versus ethnicism, which is also being conceptualized as -neo-colonialism. It endeavors to report the incidence from a grass-root perspective with no fear nor favor. This book reveals the outcry and groaning of the Niger Delta people for justice, equity and a better life as it reflects their past and present predicaments. It is indeed an empirical exhibition of the failure of leadership in the Nigerian polity, where the country's wealth is plundered by a succession of ambitious reprobates, incompetents recircling themselves year after year leaving the unrepresented Niger Delta people (the economy base) in wrecks and total neglect. It paradoxically and analytically presents Niger Delta people as a people who today live in the society where the realities of life seem to fly in the face of the promises of God and the endowment of nature; whereby are faced with a double dilemma: "A HELL THAT DARES THEM TO ACHIEVE AND AT THE SAME TIME ANNIHILATES THEM FOR CUTTING AGAINST THE GRAIN". It is a dilemma that reaps a whirlwind of anger and despair.
