This innovative digital coursebook provides clearly edited leading Supreme Court cases interpreting the first freedoms secured by the Bill of Rights—the First Amendment’s protections of “the freedom of speech” and “of the press,” as well as its prohibition of laws “respecting an establishment of religion” or “prohibiting the free exercise thereof.” Furthermore, this coursebook offers accompanying multimedia modules featuring videos, photos, music, original documents, and other content, along with commentary and questions, that enhance the study of these fundamental guarantees.

This digital coursebook is ideal for teaching a First Amendment course at the law school, graduate, or undergraduate level. It is optimized for use on the iPad or other multimedia devices running the Kindle app.

In progress, this book will be completed and available for classroom use in 2016. If you are a professor and would like to obtain a preview copy, or would like to suggest cases or other content for inclusion, please contact the author through his law school website.
