Reformation in Foreign Missions Bob Finley

This book is a call for change in the way foreign missionary work is carried on by evangelical Christians. After serving as a missionary evangelist throughout the world for 60 years, the author has concluded that traditional missionary methods are in dire need of reformation. He says most are counter productive, and hurt the cause of Christ more than they help. To those who say that Scripture mandates "going and sending." he maintains that there is no record anywhere in the ?New Testament that our Lord ever sent an apostle (missionary) where he did not speak the major language of that locality. Today's "cross-cultural" operations are looked upon as "institutional colonialism" in many countries. They should be phased out and replaced with a new approach that is more Biblical, more effective and more in keeping with basic principles of the Christian faith.
