Time for the Camel to Spit: A Collection of short stories and poetry Creative Mind

An eclectic mix of creative writing, using short stories and poems produced by our writing group. This collection of inspired creative works focuses on diverse themes from, humour, dialogue and dialect, phobias, adult fairy tales, world war one, crime and thrillers, the supernatural, family and relationships, reminiscences, in their shoes and strange worlds. The project based structure of the book enables the reader and writer to appreciate the breadth of possible writing that one can tackle. By concentrating on workshop and experimental type writings, though not too experimental, the works presented demonstrate creativity, honesty and integrity. Writing can be a vehicle for bringing together a community of very different people with a strong range of mixed interests. All of this is reflected in the work. Group writing and support helps to stimulate the imagination to produce a lively and engaging body of writing, presented here. Freeing up the mind, with contrasting tasks, helps to tackle new and unusual issues both topical and historic plus even those undreamt of! Everything from the obvious, memories, the misunderstood, the mystifying and the controversial and news-worthy are explored by fifteen writers based in Lancashire, England. Some stories have a local basis but others are entirely tales of the imagination, whilst others span the globe, from Paris to Ireland, South Africa and France and even further afield. Travel in the mind to unusual destinations and even stranger situations all given enhanced clarification.
